

Steve Dixon – Biography 2010

Steve joined the Central Regional Board of SBN as a co-opted member in 2009 and has thoroughly enjoyed being part of an active, growing network of businesses committed to showing each other and the wider NZ business community how to grow and prosper sustainably. He was elected Chair of the Central Board in April 2010.

Steve brings to the Board economic and financial skills, combined with many years' experience in sustainable business. He has a Masters in Environmental Policy and Economics from London School of Economics (2002) and has valuable experience working in the area of sustainability – including with various NGOs in the UK and New Zealand and in the Ministry for the Environment, where he led a team encouraging sustainability in the tourism, waste, dairy, and film industries. Steve currently leads the sustainability practice at the consulting company Maven. In this role he helps businesses achieve a balance of economic success and environmental and social sustainability.

Steve believes that sustainable business is essential to our national economic performance and is committed to supporting companies to build wealth through sustainable economic and environmental practices.

Steve is married to Jane and lives in Hataitai, Wellington with their two young children Holly and Ruby.
